

DETROIT BAPTIST THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
SUMMER SCHOOL 2012

The following is a general announcement of which courses will be offered, the weeks involved, and the professors who will teach. Registration will take place in the spring semester. The dress code for seminary students is business casual.

First Session: May 15–25 (8:00–11:50 A.M.)

245 2 Thessalonians: Greek Exegesis (2 hours), R. Bruce Compton, Th.D.
Room 101

This class involves translation, syntactical study, and other exegetical procedures. Attention is given to sermonic development.

538 Theology and Practice of Worship (2 hours), David M. Doran, D.Min.
Room 202

This course will be an examination of the biblical material on worship in order to develop a theological perspective on worship in this dispensation. Application of these truths will then be made to the practical aspects of cultivating a worshipping church and designing God-centered worship services. In light of the current debates about worship, the class will aim to help the student evaluate these from a biblical perspective.

Second Session: May 29–June 8 (8:00–11:50 A.M.)

205 Romans: English Bible (2 hours), William W. Combs, Th.D.
Room 101

An exposition of the epistle emphasizing the theological content and development of the book.

345 Church Polity (2 hours), Mark A. Snoeberger, Ph.D.
Room 202

A survey and biblical analysis of ecclesiastical polity as practiced broadly within the Christian church, with particular attention given to variations of the congregational model. Specific topics discussed include the relationships of the local church, the number and description of the ecclesiastical offices, the interchange between pastoral oversight and congregational rule, as well as church order and discipline.

Third Session: June 12–June 22 (8:00–11:50 A.M.)

520 Theology of Missions (2 hours), Robert J. Howell, D.Min.
Room 101

A combination of biblical and systematic theology of missions in both the Old and New Testaments, including an emphasis on the mission of the early church in Acts and the Letters. This course also addresses contemporary issues such as holistic mission and incarnational ministry.
